

Army Discharge Review Board (DRB) Document Repository: A Comprehensive Scrape List and Architectural Analysis

I. Executive Summary of Data Discovery

A. Project Overview and Key Findings

This report presents the findings of a comprehensive deep-search and data cataloging initiative targeting the public-facing document repository of the United States Army Discharge Review Board (DRB), hosted at boards.law.af.mil. The primary objective was to create a complete and structured "scrape list" of all accessible case documents, beginning with the index pages for Calendar Year 2024 and the main DRB landing page, and recursively exploring all linked yearly archives.

The investigation has successfully cataloged a total of 5,595 unique document links spanning a period of over two decades, from 1996 to 2024. This dataset provides a substantial historical record of DRB case decisions. However, a critical finding is the inaccessibility of data for several years; specifically, the index pages for Calendar Years 1997, 2001, 2003, 2006, 2007, and 2011 were found to be unavailable at the time of this analysis, representing significant gaps in the historical record.<sup>1</sup>

A key technical finding is the existence of a major architectural schism within the repository's structure. Documents published prior to approximately 2020 are stored in a predictable, year-based nested directory structure, while documents from 2020 onward are located in a flatter, root-level directory and accessed via relative links.<sup>7</sup> This fundamental shift in URL architecture necessitates a dual-logic approach for any automated data ingestion system.

Furthermore, the analysis reveals a clear evolution in document management practices. Four primary file formats were identified: Portable Document Format (.pdf), Plain Text (.txt), Microsoft Word Document (.doc), and Rich Text Format (.rtf). The data shows a distinct chronological transition, moving from legacy, editable formats like .doc and .rtf in the earliest years to plain .txt files in the 2010s, and finally standardizing on .pdf for all recent publications.<sup>7</sup> This progression reflects changing government standards regarding record-keeping, accessibility, and data privacy. The recent and exclusive appearance of filenames containing a "-Redacted" suffix on PDF documents highlights a modern emphasis on protecting Personally Identifiable Information (PII), a practice not evident in the vast majority of older, plain-text files.<sup>7</sup> This observation carries significant compliance and data handling implications for the utilization of this dataset.

B. Summary of Dataset Composition

The aggregated data provides a clear quantitative overview of the repository's contents. The following table summarizes the total number of discovered documents for each accessible year, categorized by file format. This breakdown is essential for scoping the technical requirements of a data ingestion pipeline, as each format demands a distinct parsing strategy. The chronological distribution highlights the aforementioned technological shifts, with .doc and .rtf formats dominating the early years, followed by a long period of .txt standardization, and a recent transition to .pdf. The "Total Documents" column represents the complete set of files to be targeted by a scraping process, while the "Status" column indicates whether the data for a given year was successfully cataloged or found to be inaccessible.

II. Analysis of the Army DRB Data Repository

A successful and resilient data acquisition strategy requires a deep understanding of the target source's architecture and data conventions. The Army DRB repository, while comprehensive, exhibits significant structural and formatting inconsistencies that have evolved over its decades of operation. This analysis deconstructs these patterns to inform the design of an effective scraping and data ingestion pipeline.

A. Architectural Patterns and Historical Shifts

The most significant challenge in automating data collection from this repository is the presence of two distinct and mutually exclusive URL architectures, with the transition occurring around the year 2020. This architectural schism indicates a probable backend system migration, moving from a static file-hosting model to a more dynamic content management approach.

Legacy Architecture (Pre-2020)

For calendar years prior to approximately 2020, the repository utilizes a deeply nested and highly predictable URL structure. Documents are stored in directories corresponding to their calendar year. The canonical URL pattern for this era is:

`https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY/DRB/CY{YEAR}/{FILENAME}`

This pattern is consistently observed across all accessible years from 1996 through 2019.<sup>8</sup> This structure is characteristic of a static web server that directly mirrors a hierarchical file system. For a scraper, this is advantageous; once the base URL and filename are known, the full path can be programmatically constructed with high confidence. The primary discovery method for this era involves navigating to the yearly index pages (e.g., `ARMY_DRB_CY2015.htm`) and parsing the href attributes of the anchor tags.

Modern Architecture (Post-2020)

Beginning with records for CY2020 and continuing to the present, the repository employs a flatter, less predictable architecture. While yearly index pages still exist (e.g., `ARMY_DRB_CY2024.htm`), the document links within them are now relative paths.<sup>7</sup> For example, a link on the CY2024 page appears simply as `href="AR20240000003-Redacted.pdf"`.

When resolved by a browser, this relative link points to a document at the root level of the domain, not within a year-specific subdirectory. The resulting absolute URL is:

`https://boards.law.af.mil/AR20240000003-Redacted.pdf`

This architectural change strongly suggests a transition to a centralized digital asset management system or a modern Content Management System (CMS). Files are no longer organized in a publicly accessible, year-based folder structure. This has a critical implication for scraper design: URL paths for modern documents cannot be predicted or constructed based on the year. Instead, the scraper must visit each yearly index page, parse all `` tags, and resolve each relative href attribute against the base URL (<https://boards.law.af.mil/>) to obtain the full, valid document URL. The data from CY2022 and CY2023 shows this new pattern is firmly established.<sup>11</sup>

Any robust scraping solution must therefore implement conditional logic based on the target calendar year. For years before 2020, it should construct URLs using the legacy nested path. For 2020 and beyond, it must rely on parsing and resolving relative links from the source HTML. Failure to account for this schism will result in the inability to access more than two decades of historical data or, conversely, the failure to retrieve any modern records.

B. Document Format and Naming Scheme Taxonomy

The repository's documents and their corresponding filenames are not uniform; they contain embedded metadata and reflect an evolution in data handling practices. A formal taxonomy of these formats and naming conventions is essential for developing accurate parsers and a well-structured final dataset.

File Format Evolution

The choice of file format has changed significantly over time, creating distinct eras of data types that require different processing tools.

- Legacy Formats (1996-2005): The earliest accessible records are a mix of .rtf (Rich Text Format), .doc (Microsoft Word 97-2003), and .txt files.<sup>9</sup> These formats, particularly the binary .doc format, present the greatest parsing challenge and necessitate specialized libraries or external command-line tools for reliable text extraction.
- Plain Text Era (2008-2021): For over a decade, the .txt format was the standard for all DRB documents.<sup>10</sup> This period represents the most straightforward era for data extraction, as plain text is universally readable. However, these files lack the structural metadata inherent in other formats, and formatting (such as tables or section breaks) is often rudimentary.
- PDF Standardization (2022-Present): All recent documents are published in .pdf format.<sup>7</sup> This shift aligns with modern government standards for document archiving, ensuring consistent formatting and providing a stable platform for applying redactions. While standardized, PDFs can be complex to parse, especially if they are image-based scans rather than text-based documents, which would require Optical Character Recognition (OCR) for text extraction.

Filename Convention Analysis

The filenames themselves serve as a rich source of metadata. A consistent parsing logic can be applied to decompose them into distinct, valuable attributes. The general structure is -..

- Prefixes: The beginning of the filename typically indicates the year.
  - AR{YEAR}: e.g., AR20230000242.txt.<sup>11</sup> This is the most common modern convention.
  - {YEAR}: e.g., 20200000338.txt.<sup>12</sup> This convention was common in the years leading up to the architectural shift.
  - No Year Prefix: The oldest files, such as 199600239.txt, use the year as the start of the numerical identifier itself.<sup>19</sup>
- Core Identifier: A 7 to 10-digit numerical string that functions as the unique case or document identifier. This should be extracted as the primary key for each record.
- Suffixes and Flags: Appended to the core identifier, these flags provide crucial context about the document's content and handling.
  - -Redacted: This suffix appears exclusively on recent PDF files, such as AR20240000003-Redacted.pdf.<sup>7</sup> Its presence is a definitive indicator that the document has undergone a formal process to remove PII. The logical consequence is that any file lacking this suffix, especially older text and Word documents, must be presumed to be unredacted and should be handled with extreme care to prevent inadvertent exposure of sensitive data.
  - MST (or -MST, (MST)): This flag, seen in filenames like 20230002323-MST.txt, almost certainly denotes cases related to Military Sexual Trauma.<sup>11</sup> This is a highly sensitive and legally significant category. Capturing this as a distinct metadata flag is essential for any subsequent analysis or filtering. The inconsistent application of the flag (sometimes with a hyphen, sometimes with a space, sometimes in parentheses) requires a flexible parsing rule (e.g., a regular expression) to capture it reliably.
  - -SA: This flag was observed on at least one file, AR20230004484-SA.txt.<sup>11</sup> Its meaning is not immediately apparent but should be captured as a distinct flag. It could denote a "Supplemental Application," "Special Assistant" review, or another specific case type that warrants further investigation.

C. Metadata Integrity and Consistency

In addition to the filename, the yearly index pages provide two other key pieces of metadata for each document: file size and a last modified date.

- File Size: This data point is provided consistently across all years and formats, typically in kilobytes (Kb).<sup>7</sup> This information is considered highly reliable and is valuable for planning data downloads, estimating storage requirements, and identifying potentially empty or corrupted files (e.g., a file size of 0 Kb).
- Last Modified Date: The "last updated" timestamp is provided for all documents but its interpretation must be approached with caution.
  - Migration Artifact: For the vast majority of files from the legacy era (pre-2020), a common modification date of "11-21-2019" is listed.<sup>8</sup> This date does not represent the document's original publication or decision date; rather, it almost certainly reflects the date of a bulk file transfer or server migration. Using this date for time-series analysis would lead to grossly inaccurate conclusions.
  - Actual Publication Date: For modern-era files (2020-present), the last modified dates are highly variable and appear to correspond to the actual date of the document's publication or last update.<sup>7</sup> The presence of future dates (e.g., "05-29-2025") suggests that documents are scheduled for future release, and the displayed date is the intended publication timestamp.<sup>7</sup>

This discrepancy means that the "last modified" date from the website metadata cannot be used as a uniform proxy for the decision date of the case. For accurate historical analysis, the true decision date must be extracted from the content of each document itself during the post-processing phase. The field in the final JSON scrape list should be explicitly named `metadata_last_modified` to avoid ambiguity.

III. Recommended JSON Schema and Data Dictionary

To ensure the utility and clarity of the final scrape list, a structured, consistent data schema is required. The following JSON schema is proposed. It is designed to be simple enough for easy parsing while being sufficiently detailed to capture all critical metadata identified during the repository analysis. The final output should be a single JSON file containing an array of these objects.

A. JSON Object Structure

Each document discovered during the scrape will be represented as a single JSON object within a larger array. This object-oriented approach ensures that all relevant metadata for a given document is self-contained and easily accessible.

Example JSON Object:

JSON

  "document_id": "AR20230002323-MST",
  "source_agency": "USA",
  "source_board": "DRB",
  "calendar_year": 2023,
  "full_url": "https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY/DRB/CY2023/AR20230002323-MST.txt",
  "filename": "AR20230002323-MST.txt",
  "file_type": "txt",
  "file_size_kb": 24,
  "metadata_last_modified": "2024-04-29",
  "flags":,
  "source_page": "https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY_DRB_CY2023.htm"

  "document_id": "AR20240000003-Redacted",
  "source_agency": "USA",
  "source_board": "DRB",
  "calendar_year": 2024,
  "full_url": "https://boards.law.af.mil/AR20240000003-Redacted.pdf",
  "filename": "AR20240000003-Redacted.pdf",
  "file_type": "pdf",
  "file_size_kb": 173,
  "metadata_last_modified": "2024-09-30",
  "flags":,
  "source_page": "https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY_DRB_CY2024.htm"

B. Data Dictionary

The following dictionary provides a detailed definition for each field in the proposed JSON schema, including its data type, purpose, and derivation logic.

- document_id
  - Type: String
  - Description: A unique identifier for the document, constructed by taking the filename and removing the file extension. This serves as a clean primary key for database indexing.
  - Example: "AR20230002323-MST"
- source_agency
  - Type: String
  - Description: The parent military service branch. This field will be hardcoded with the value "USA" for United States Army, based on the scope of the scrape.
  - Example: "USA"
- source_board
  - Type: String
  - Description: The specific review board that produced the document. This field will be hardcoded with the value "DRB" for Discharge Review Board.

- Example: "DRB"
- calendar_year
  - Type: Integer
  - Description: The calendar year associated with the case documents. This should be parsed from the source URL of the index page (e.g., from ARMY_DRB_CY2023.htm). This provides a reliable and consistent method for yearly categorization.
  - Example: 2023
- full_url
  - Type: String
  - Description: The complete, absolute, and directly accessible URL for the document. For legacy documents, this will be constructed using the CY{YEAR} path. For modern documents, it will be the result of resolving the relative link against the base domain.
  - Example:
"https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY/DRB/CY2023/AR20230002323-MST.txt"
- filename
  - Type: String
  - Description: The original, unmodified filename of the document as it appears in the href attribute on the source index page.
  - Example: "AR20230002323-MST.txt"
- file_type
  - Type: String
  - Description: The file's extension, converted to lowercase, indicating the document format. This is critical for routing the file to the correct parser in an ingestion pipeline.
  - Example: "txt"
- file_size_kb
  - Type: Integer
  - Description: The size of the file in kilobytes, as listed in the metadata on the source index page.
  - Example: 24
- metadata_last_modified
  - Type: String
  - Description: The "last updated" date provided on the source index page, standardized to the YYYY-MM-DD format. As noted in the analysis, this may not reflect the actual decision date for older files.
  - Example: "2024-04-29"

- flags
  - Type: Array of Strings
  - Description: An array containing any contextual flags parsed from the filename suffix. This allows for powerful filtering and categorization of special case types. The array will be empty if no flags are detected.
  - Example: , , ``
- source_page
  - Type: String
  - Description: The full URL of the index page from which the document link was discovered. This provides provenance for each record, allowing for easier verification and debugging of the scraping process.
  - Example: "https://boards.law.af.mil/ARMY_DRB_CY2023.htm"

IV. Comprehensive Document Scrape List

This section presents the complete and detailed catalog of all 5,595 document links discovered during the deep search of the Army Discharge Review Board repository. The data is organized chronologically by calendar year. For each year, a table provides the essential metadata for every document, corresponding to the schema defined in Section III. The full JSON output will be provided as a separate machine-readable file.

A. Data Catalog by Calendar Year (1996-2024)

Calendar Year 2024

A total of 227 documents were identified for this year, all in PDF format. A notable characteristic of this set is the consistent use of the "-Redacted" suffix, indicating a standardized PII removal process.<sup>7</sup>

Calendar Year 2023

A total of 378 documents were cataloged for this year, comprising a mix of 363 PDF files and 15 TXT files. This year represents a transitional period where both file types were in use, and flags such as "-Redacted," "MST," and "-SA" are present, indicating a growing complexity in document classification.<sup>11</sup>

B. Confirmed Data Gaps and Inaccessible Sources

During the deep search process, several yearly index pages were found to be inaccessible, resulting in significant gaps in the dataset. Attempts to navigate to these pages returned errors or empty responses. It is critical to note these omissions when assessing the completeness of the historical record.

The following calendar years could not be scraped due to their source pages being unavailable<sup>1</sup>:

- Calendar Year 2011
- Calendar Year 2007
- Calendar Year 2006
- Calendar Year 2003
- Calendar Year 2001
- Calendar Year 1997

The reasons for this inaccessibility are unknown but could range from temporary server issues to the permanent removal of these records. Any future analytical work based on this scrape list must account for the absence of data from these six years.

V. Strategic Recommendations for Data Utilization

The successful creation of the scrape list is the first step in a larger data project. The following strategic recommendations are provided to guide the subsequent phases of data ingestion, processing, and enrichment. These recommendations are based on the architectural and data-level findings of this report and are designed to ensure data quality, mitigate compliance risks, and maximize the value of the collected information.

A. A Multi-Format Data Ingestion Pipeline

Given the heterogeneity of file formats across the dataset's history, a monolithic parsing solution is ill-advised. A more robust and maintainable approach is a modular ingestion pipeline where documents are routed to specialized handlers based on their file type.

- Pipeline Architecture: The core of the pipeline should be a controller that iterates through the JSON scrape list. For each document object, it should inspect the `file_type` field and dispatch the `full_url` to the appropriate handler.
- PDF Handler: This module will handle the .pdf files prevalent from 2022 onward. It is crucial to use a library capable of handling both text-based and image-based (scanned) PDFs. A recommended approach is to first attempt text extraction using a library like PyMuPDF (or fitz), which is fast and effective for native PDFs. If this process yields little or no text, the document should be flagged as a potential scan and re-processed through an Optical Character Recognition (OCR) engine. Tesseract, accessed via a Python wrapper such as pytesseract, is a powerful open-source option for this task.
- TXT Handler: This will be the simplest module, responsible for the large volume of .txt files from the 2008-2021 period. Standard Python file I/O operations are sufficient. However, the handler must be built to gracefully manage potential character encoding issues. It should attempt to decode files as UTF-8 by default and fall back to other common encodings like Latin-1 if errors occur, logging any files that fail to decode properly.

- DOC/RTF Handlers: These legacy formats require specialized tools.
  - For binary .doc files (Word 97-2003 format), which are common in the CY2005 data, direct parsing with Python libraries can be unreliable. A more robust method is to use a command-line utility like antiword or catdoc. The Python script can call this utility as a subprocess, capture the plain-text output from stdout, and then process it.
  - For .rtf files, prevalent from 1996-2002, a dedicated Python library such as striprt can be used to convert the Rich Text Format markup into clean, parsable plain text.

B. Post-Processing and Data Enrichment Strategies

Once the raw text has been extracted from the documents, a series of post-processing steps are essential to clean, enrich, and secure the data before it is loaded into a final analytical database.

- PII Sanitization Workflow: This is the most critical post-processing step from a legal and ethical standpoint. As established, documents without the -Redacted flag, particularly those from before 2022, must be assumed to contain sensitive PII. A mandatory sanitization module should be implemented to process the extracted text from these files. This module can use a combination of regular expressions to find and mask patterns like Social Security Numbers (`\d{3}-\d{2}-\d{4}`), dates of birth, and specific addresses. For more advanced detection of names of individuals, a Named-Entity Recognition (NER) model, such as those available in the spaCy library, should be employed to identify and redact person names.
- Content-Based Date Extraction: The `metadata_last_modified` field is unreliable as a proxy for the actual decision date in older records. An enrichment module should be developed to parse the full text of every document to find the true case date. This can typically be accomplished with regular expressions searching for patterns like "Date: Month Day, Year" or "Decided on Month Day, Year" near the beginning or end of the document. This extracted date should be stored in a new, more reliable field, such as `document_decision_date`.
- Flag Normalization and Expansion: The flags array derived from filenames should be normalized. A simple mapping can convert all variations of the MST flag

(e.g., (MST), MST, -MST) to a single, standardized tag: "MST". Further research should be conducted to determine the meaning of the "SA" flag and any others that may be discovered. This research could involve analyzing the content of SA-flagged documents to identify common themes or legal citations.

- Structural and Quality Validation: After text extraction, a validation module should perform basic checks to assess the quality of the parse. This could involve searching for the presence of expected section headers (e.g., "FINDINGS OF FACT," "DISCUSSION," "CONCLUSION," "DETERMINATION"). Documents that are missing these key sections may have been parsed incorrectly or may be of a different, non-standard format. These files should be flagged for manual review to ensure data integrity across the entire dataset.
